

Johannes Boch

Project Manager

Johannes Boch is a Project Manager at the Novartis Foundation, responsible for coordinating activities in Brazil for a multi-stakeholder platform that is addressing hypertension in urban settings in low- and middle- income countries. In this function, Johannes is initiating public-private partnerships with a focus on private sector capabilities and entrepreneurial initiatives.

Additionally, Johannes supports healthcare system analysis and consultations for governments on developing digital strategies for noncommunicable diseases and innovative models for healthcare delivery.

Prior to joining the Novartis Foundation in December 2016, Johannes worked at the University of St. Gallen (HSG) Institute of Management Latin America in São Paulo, establishing and managing consulting and research activities on impact investing for investors and entrepreneurs, with a focus on healthcare. In addition to assignments with the KfW banking group, Johannes worked as an independent consultant for companies interested in creating social value while securing financial return.

Johannes has worked as a psychologist in different research and in-/out-patients facilities across Europe. He holds a B.Sc. and a M.Sc. in Psychology from the University of Fribourg (CH), as well as a B.A. in International Affairs from the University of St. Gallen (CH).
